Day at the Dome

Over 125 volunteers from across Texas, including our staff, other Habitat affiliates, and state legislators, picked up hammers this month to help build all the walls for a Habitat home at the Texas State Capitol. These walls are now in Killeen, Texas, where Fort Hood Habitat will complete the Spruell family's home. Day at the Dome highlights the work being done by thousands of volunteers every year, as well as the importance of housing policy at the state level.

Celebrating Homeownership

Austin Habitat, along with many other local and national housing organizations, are celebrating National Homeownership Month. This particular month is dedicated to recognizing the many benefits of homeownership to our families, communities, and nation.

"Each June, we mark National Homeownership Month, a time for HUD and FHA to renew our commitment to supporting individuals and families in achieving and sustaining homeownership," said Secretary Marcia L. Fudge. "Homeownership is a key source of wealth building and is often the foundation for one's life.

Unfortunately, the lack of affordable housing supply has placed homeownership out of reach for many people with low and moderate incomes, first-time homebuyers, and communities that have been historically and systemically locked out of homeownership." In recognition of this celebration, we hope you will consider supporting our vision where every family in Central Texas has the opportunity to achieve the American Dream. You can volunteer on-site, advocate for more affordable housing at all levels of government, or donate to our mission.
